BY GUS MALBERT.

The Poor Boob sat in the press box and watched it. It really wasn't a question of having to watch it; he might just as well have been bidding 450 in auction pinochle. There was none to say him 'nay,' but about that time he got a hunch that all the preseason weather reports told of an impending hard summer, and he wrote down: Norfolk, o; Richmond, 5.

Once in a while starving-to-death lurches forth in the guise of a cure-all. Starving-to-death put on the proper make-up yesterday, and wasn't even willing to split fifty-fifty.

John Joseph Kelly stepped outside the barricade and announced that Richmond and Norfolk were to play a ball game, by which token John Joseph Kelly, who gains his right to live because he is employed as an umpire by Mr. James Oscar Boatwright, president of the Virginia League, stands in imminent danger of answering to an indictment of foisting upon the public-about 1,000 of them-wasn't all Mr. Kelly's fault, nor charge be laid at the door of those very respectable persons who occasionally play baseball in a manner pleasing to the people of Richmond Mr. Kelly did everything possible to hasten matters. There was never a minute in which Mr. Kelly wasn't in it and no apology is offered for the paraphrase. Mr. Kelly's "on your toes fellers" was about the most important part of the one hour and thirty-seven minutes engagement.

But somehow or other Mr. Kelly was prevented from performing according the book; the "some how or other" heing made possible because Joe Kirscher brought along a phalanx of wagecarners who galloped as speedly.
